Pamplin receives Virginia award

By FRANCES ABBITT

The Town of Pamplin has received the 1983 Virginia Municipal League Achievement Award for Community Development. Pamplin is the smallest town in the State of Virginia to have received such an award.

The presentation was made at the annual conference of the VML in Williamsburg recently. Accepting the award on behalf of the Town of Pamplin was Mayor Patrick Harrison.

The award was made on the basis of Pamplin's recovery following a fire on March 8, 1982 that left Pamplin's major industry, the Pamplin Dress Factory in ashes.

As Pamplin residents, town and county representatives surveyed the rubble and ruin that was the aftermath of the fire, they were deeply grateful that no one was injured. However, the economy of the community suffered a devastating blow. Almost immediately retail businesses felt the results of the community's reduced income.

The owner of the burned-down factory decided not to rebuild, so the answer had to be found elsewhere.

Pamplin residents are hard working people and they, along with the town and county officials, realized something had to be done. They met with the idea of working out some sort of plan to get the factory going again. With the cooperation of private industry, Pamplin Town Council, Appomattox County Board of Supervisors and Appomattox County School Board, a solution was found.

The Pamplin Elementary School building was vacant, no longer used as a school, so the idea of a factory in that building looked promising but there was the question of finding qualified help to operate the business.

The determined group of town and county officials with support of local residents began to look for someone to operate the factory.

Jim Webb, former manager for Bob Stewart, owner of the Pamplin Dress Co., contacted Fred Lawson, who operates a number of garment factories to see if interest could be generated and a deal worked out. Lawson was definitely interested and they were able to work out a deal provided they could get the building.

The Appomattox County School Board, who held the title to the school building, was willing to turn the building over to the Appomattox Board of Supervisors who in turn gave the building to the Town of Pamplin. With the backing of Fred Lawson, the Town of Pamplin worked out a deal with Webb.

The Town of Pamplin furnished approximately $30,000.00 to complete renovation of the school building to meet the needs of the tenant. It is being repaid in monthly installments over a period of five years with the right to renew the lease.

Pamplin honored

When work began on the building in November of 1982 the Pamplin Town Council spearheaded the organization of a volunteer work crew to help with the work and keep cost to a minimum. The work was completed in December 1982, and the factory opened its doors on January 3, 1983. Today, the factory has approximately 60 employees.

"After the disaster of the town's major industry, Mr. Horace Gunnoe on behalf of the Appomattox County Board of Supervisors and the Town Council of Pamplin, worked in cooperative effort with the Appomattox County School Board to come up with an inexpensive, viable, solution to Pamplin's economic disaster," said William R. Britton, Appomattox town manager and assistant to the Pamplin Town Council.

"Following public meetings in Pamplin to get citizens interest, concern and agreement on possible solution of using the former school building as replacement facility for the Pamplin Dress Factory, and getting favorable comments from public hearings the Appomattox County Board of Supervisors and the Pamplin Town Council worked at this plan to re-employ approximately 50 local, experienced workers. This has helped with the uplift of local trade of many merchants in the area," Britton added.

"The Virginia Municipal League felt the cooperation that it took between the different entities in this rural community was excellent and worthy of the Community Development Award from the State of Virginia," concluded Britton.

Appomattox's Nash dairy farm receives state award

The father-son team of Richard T. and Twyman Nash were recently selected as Virginia's winning entry in the "National Soil and Water Conservation Awards Program."

This program is conducted jointly by the Land Improvement Contractors Association, Virginia Association of Soil & Water Conservation Districts, and Virginia Chapter, Soil Conservation Society of America.

The Nash family operates a Grade A dairy on their 595-acre Appomattox County farm. Their 320 acres of cropland are used mostly in a three-year rotation of corn, small grain and hay. About 20 acres are used for alfalfa.

Since becoming a District Cooperator in 1957, the Nashes have carried out numerous conservation practices with Soil Conservation Service assistance. The farm conservation plan has been revised several times since 1957 with the latest revision in March 1983. Their current program includes contour stripcropping on 50 acres, six acres of grassed waterways, 1200 feet of subsurface drainage in cropland and 106 acres of improved pastures. Also, two farm ponds, 30 acres of wetland left for wildlife land and 140 acres of woodland management including 90 acres of planted loblolly pine.

The most critical cropland erosion on the Nashes farm were two fields which had soil losses of 10 and 16 tons per acre respectively. With assistance from the Soil Conservation Service, stripcropping was designed and implemented on those fields, which in conjunction with the three year rotation and grassed waterways, reduced soil loss to 2 1/2 and 4 tons per acre. The entire cropland management system sustains production within tolerable soil loss limits.

Chisel plowing is one of the conservation tillage methods used to conserve soil and water for crop production. They have produced no-till corn but prefer the 2-year rotation using small grain followed by red clover-orchardgrass for hay, then "green manure." This system provides ample grain and forage for 650 tons of silage and 8400 bushels of grain to feed the 130 cow herd and surplus grain to sell for additional income.

The forestry management program is conducted in cooperation with the Virginia Division of Forestry. Approximately 90 acres of harvested timberland has been replanted to loblolly pine. About 50 percent of the reforested area has been treated by aerial herbicides and hand cutting to enhance growth of the preferred species. This practice will be continued as needed to insure a productive forest in the future. Mr. Nash is a local fire warden as a service to his community.

Twyman Nash plans to purchase a computer in 1984 to enhance farm records management and to review alternatives before making farm management decisions.

"We believe that this operation is based on sound land management, sound financial management and has not abandoned conservation because of larger equipment like so many have done. They have avoided the "leap before you look" concept that have financially weakened so many operations," says Dennis W. Torrence, chairman of the Robert E. Lee Soil and Water Conservation District.

Board to meet next Wednesday

The Appomattox County School Board will meet next Wednesday, Nov. 16 at 3:30 p.m. in the school board office on Main Street.

The board will consider a number of items in addition to their regular monthly reports.

Board members will consider a recommendation from the Instructional Materials Committee that the play, "Hugs and Kisses," be approved for grades 3-8 in county schools. The play deals with child abuse.

The board will also consider a recommendation from the local unit of the American Heart Association that the smoking area at Appomattox County High School be discontinued.

The board will consider as well a request from the Virginia Army National Guard that the high school be approved for use in the event of an emergency.

Spiggle named

APPOMATTOX MAYOR RONALD C. SPIGGLE has been appointed by the Board of Supervisors to the Central Virginia Planning District Commission as a representative of Appomattox County to fill the unexpired term of Mr. Horace W.Coleman, Jr.

Father Darkleaf

By CALVIN ROBINSON

November has so much going for it. Fall foliage is at its lavish peak of beauty. Excitement builds as big holidays approach. And for many there is the thrill of hunting season. Many nimrods got an early start Monday. General opinion is that we will have a good hunting season.

As some of you know, Mother Brightleaf is a patient at Virginia Baptist Hospital, Lynchburg and is better at this writing. Thanks for the inquiries, gifts of food, etc. Especially prayers. It happens that Thanksgiving Day comes on the 24th of November this year. And that is how it was in 1932, our wedding date.

Losing streaks, like winning streaks, come to an end. Altavista H.S. had a long losing streak over a dozen games. Broke it by overcoming our ACHS Raiders.

Did you vote Tuesday? Some counties had more contests than Appomattox, but it is best to stay in practice as a voter.

It is not a lazy persons view to say that fall leaves look better on the trees than on the ground waiting to be raked away.

There are plans to install some additional rental boxes at the local post office.

Thanks for reading and seeya around.

Last week I reported seeing sparrows checking at the window-side bird feeder. Friday morning a lone chickadee appeared. And Friday afternoon a proud and statly Red Cardinal appeared. Getting to be time to feed the birds.

VPI fans are getting excited about the prospects of a football bowl invitation. The Hokies are having a good year. My alma mater, University of Richmond, is picking up, following some years on the downgrade. The Spiders go to Colgate University this week. But not for toothpaste.

Bryant wins contest

Kim Bryant of Appomattox has been declared winner in last week's Times-Virginian Football Contest.

Bryant missed accurately predicting only two games in the contest.

Tied for second place, missing only three of the contest games, were Steve Hamlett of Pamplin, Teresa Mayberry, Leon Bryant Jr., Howard Anderson, Todd Pickett, Donald Williams, Judy Marshall, Ronald Spiggle and Alton Lucado Sr., all of Appomattox.

Going to the tie-breaker for a winner, Steve Hamlett was closer to the actual game scores and has been named winner of second place.

Bryant will receive a check for $20.00 as first place prize and Hamlett will receive $10.00 as second place winner.

The final contest of the season continues this week with full details of rules and prizes on page 12 of this issue of the paper.

APPOMATTOX LION'S CLUB president, Jim Sefter, is shown presenting a check in the amount of $1,000.00 for the land laboratory fund to W. C. Perrow, vice-chairman of the Appomattox FFA Alumni Association, Inc. This donation from the Lion's Club depicts another way clubs and civic concerns in and the local community. A successful Beef Festival in September provided the funds for the donation. The Appomattox FFA Alumni Association is making a fund drive to purchase approximately 20 acres of land adjoining the Appomattox County High School from Fred Jones for use as a land laboratory for the vocational agriculture departments in the county. To date, the fund raising campaign is approaching the half-way mark of $11,000.00.
